

Full Of Beans by Road Gamer

Eight members of a thematically clued subset of a tripartite set have entered the grid, with seven of them displacing normal clued entries. Definitions and wordplay of each displaced entry have been moved into clues for other entries which do not cross a thematic entry, so that all but one of such other clues contains extra words representing either the displaced definition or its wordplay. These extra words must be extracted from clues before solving them. Having filled the grid, solvers must re-form the seven scattered clues and insert their solutions in the grid, thereby delivering seven members from the attentions of the eighth. Finally, solvers must highlight five cells in an across entry, which might provide a gender-bending synonym for a second subset, and six cells in a down entry, which might describe the study of the third subset. All entries in the final grid are real words. Chambers is the principal reference.
